Excerpts from Good Sites

- by Paul Tripp
www.paultripp.com

When injustice assaults again	we will remember again when image-bearers die again	our hope is held by a greater king when grieving mothers mourn again	we will work again when communities lament again	we will stand again when eyes are closed again	we will fight again when backs are turned again	because we know our greater king is just when right takes a hit again	is good when business as usual returns again	is righteous when accountability is questioned again	is merciful when narratives are twisted again	in every way he will rise again when anger rises again	and right every wrong again when hope dims again	while we wait then we remember again	we will hope the kings of earth do not hold our hope	we will believe then we remember again	we will work put not your trust in princes	we will pray in a son of man, in whom there is no salvation	we will right wrongs again and again they will fail us again	until the greater king comes again they will compromise again	to usher in righteousness forever. forsake their call again like your people of old harmed by corrupt kings

Reflection Question
Without forsaking your God-given responsibilities and relationships, how can you abandon (or lessen) your trust and hope in the things of this world? How will that change your expectations and reactions? Be specific.
